I have worked with EDP on many occasions over the past few years in various capacities (mainly archaeology, ecology and arboricultural) and have always found them to be highly responsive, very practical and thoroughly professional. They have assisted us through the minefield that is the planning process very successfully and have helped us get out safely at the other end in one piece. I would highly recommend them.

EDP offers a wide range of services that we regularly require as a Housing Association. We had not worked with EDP before, but we were extremely satisfied with their services. All of the staff have a friendly and positive attitude and the reports produced are of high quality. EDP provide competitive quotations and were able to undertake the works required under very short notice. They are a professional company that are more than happy to explain information to you, which I found hugely beneficial as I am currently a trainee surveyor. They maintained excellent communication with the client and nothing was too much effort. I would definitely recommend EDP and look forward to working with them again in the future.

I have worked closely with Ben Rosedale and his colleagues at EDP on a number of projects, most recently in attaining planning permission for a significant urban extension to Chichester – including the negotiation of a large Country Park/SANGS solution to offset recreational pressures on local coastal wildlife sites (SPA). Inputs were for all disciplines – landscape, ecology, heritage, arboriculture and agricultural land classification. Ben and his team were accommodating of all comments provided and their response was effective and efficient, no matter how big or small the issue.

I have worked closely with Ed Oakley at EDP, most recently in the development of two new dwellings within a conservation area and the setting of a number of listed buildings in Barrow-upon-Trent in Derbyshire. EDP provided heritage inputs and gave advice and undertook assessment work to develop a scheme that responded appropriately to its heritage context. The inputs were effective and efficient, and ultimately assisted in a successful planning application.

Having worked with EDP for a number of years, we view Ben Rosedale and his team as providers of the very best environmental planning services on the market. EDP understand what is required to promote land for development, to develop application and assessment material, and resolve problems as they arise. They deliver on time and to budget – they are approachable for resolving project issues and a pleasure to work with. Recent positive determinations for major urban extensions at Didcot and Taunton are testimony to the quality of their work.

I would have no hesitation in recommending EDP to any perspective client, and will be using their services again, as and when the opportunity arises.

At a late stage in the planning process, we were asked by planners to undertake a visual impact assessment. I contacted EDP and shared my problem with them. They responded very quickly, produced verified wireframes and an impact assessment. The document was very professionally presented and was received well by the planners.

Using EDP reduces risk. There may be cheaper alternatives but none that give me the same feeling of confidence that the environmental issues on our projects will be properly identified and pragmatically resolved. On that basis, using EDP makes good commercial sense.

The fact that EDP could offer a one stop shop service for all the issues we encountered on Garreg Lwyd, Environmental, Traffic/Roads and Archaeology is really useful. You always seem to have access to a relevant expert in whichever field we needed. Your report outputs are of a high quality. Not the lowest price out there but, due to high quality work, good value for money.

Having worked with EDP on a number of renewable energy projects over the last four years, I have been very impressed with both their approach and ability to work with other consultants. Their output is robust and they have always gone out of their way to provide information quickly and accurately - all of which are essential when having to present proposals to the local community. I would highly recommend them as part of any project team.

I have worked closely with Charles Mylchreest and his colleagues at EDP on a number of renewable energy projects, most recently two single turbine schemes in Leicestershire, on behalf of RES UK and Ireland Ltd. For both the LVIA and Cultural Heritage input into these projects, I have been impressed with their approach to undertaking these assessments and ultimately, the quality of work produced.

Whilst we know we can expect to pay a premium for the work EDP undertake, we are always assured that this is undertaken with the highest professionalism in terms of knowledge, experience, understanding of the planning process and ability to deal with planning officers and Statutory Consultee advisors. Reports that are produced are always to the highest standards and on time.

It is clear that EDP have a team of professionals who have varying specialities, which also provides us with comfort that we will be able to rely on that wealth of knowledge in the course of the projects we're running. Often, we need EDP to step in to negotiate with Natural England and the RSPB in order to resolve the issues that have arisen, and we can always trust that will be carried out rigorously and professionally to reach a positive outcome.

The team at EDP are all very friendly and very easy to get along with and forge working relationships with, which makes the process easy and enjoyable.
